MISS FURY

Fists of Fury

Readers of Dynamite Entertainment's Masks have already seen her in action in 1930s New York alongside the Green Hornet, the Shadow, the Spider and other pulp era heroes. This spring, though, she goes into solo action in the past and the present in the first issue of her own series, Miss Fury.

Dynamite publisher Nick Barrucci explained that, while Miss Fury had been in development for a while, the success of Masks was a catalyst for the spring 2013 launch of Miss Fury. "The Masks crossover has worked out great for Dynamite," Barrucci said. "It was our major crossover for the year, an event in the vein of Civil War or Age of Ultron. As a showcase for a rich cast of characters, appearing together for the first time in their entire history, it seemed like the perfect way to put Miss Fury on the stage. Her big Dynamite debut in the Masks miniseries created a great deal of awareness, and just begged for a follow-up. That's when we approached Rob Williams and Jack Herbert for the fantastic new series.

"We've wanted to see Miss Fury back in comics for some time, actually. The only questions was: how would we revive the character in the best way possible? When Masks came along, the premise was an absolute gift—one we'd have to take fullest advantage of.

"Pure and simple, Miss Fury is just a great character – beautiful, spirited, classic, and cool! Sure, I guess an argument could be made as to whether or not she's a pulp heroine, but we felt she fit extremely well into the Masks mix regardless, and even better into the Modern Age—which you'll see in the Miss Fury series in a way that'll blow your mind! Rob's phenomenal script rips Miss Fury out of the past and throws her into the modern era, providing an epic landscape for a tumultuous personal story. Plus, the interior artwork by Jack Herbert speaks for itself; our heroine has never looked so gorgeous...

and vicious! This will be one of our biggest launches for the first half of 2013. Miss Fury stands separate from the other projects we've done. Miss Fury is a firecracker deserving of a spotlight all her own!"

Rob Williams, who has been tapped by Dynamite to chronicle Miss Fury's solo adventures, offers some background on the character, who was originally created by June Tarpé Mills way back in 1941. "She was one of the original pulp super heroines of the 1940s, emerging at about the same time as Catwoman, and she's something of the inspiration for Hellcat," Williams said. "Marla Drake was a rich Manhattan society lady who donned a costume and mask and went out on the streets to fight crime. In our new story, she gets flung through time, both past, present and the future, and has to save her sanity and stop an army of Nazis with futuristic technology."

Williams offered a little more insight into the structure of the "two-timing" story arc. "We open in the 1940s and skip back there throughout the story, but this is all about a cadre of Nazi time travel agents trying to win World War 2 in 2013," Williams said. "Miss Fury's time travel experience isn't as simple as her just going from the 40s to our era. She's stuck in time, flipping between different eras. 2013 one minute, a further future the next. It's bringing an old character into the modern day and then beyond."

Is Williams introducing any major changes to the Miss Fury concept? "Well, she's still Marla Drake, still out on the Manhattan rooftops at night in her costume when we open the story. But her personal background is all new, and ripping her forward into 2013 is creating an exciting new timeline. We've kind of taken the original concept and turned it into a La Femme Nikita with a contemporary Homeland edge."

While Williams isn't coordinating his storyline with Chris Roberson, writer of Masks, he stresses that "the Miss Fury you'll see in our series is the same character—and we'll be continuing her stories into the future too. If she survives, of course!..."

Will any other pulp/golden age heroes make an appearance in the series? "Not in our initial five-issue storyline," Williams said. "But moving forward, member of the Masks cast could very well turn up. We'll see. I've always fancied writing The Shadow at some stage—that might be fun!"

Williams is joined on Miss Fury by artist Jack Herbert. "Jack has drawn a huge library of Dynamite comics," Barrucci said, "everything from Battlestar Galactica to Red Sonja. His recent work on Queen Sonja and Kirby: Genesis elevated his star even more. He is absolutely the best choice as artist of Miss Fury."

While Alex Ross remains busy as art director for Masks as well as cover artist for many other Dynamite projects, he couldn't pass up a chance to participate in the Miss Fury launch. "For the new Miss Fury series, Alex will paint the first cover, plus a very special subscription exclusive cover for retailers and our most die-hard pull-list customers," Barrucci said.

Miss Fury #1, a $3.99 comic by Rob Williams & Jack Herbert, is scheduled for April 3rd release. The book will be offered with 50/50 covers by Alex Ross & J. Scott Campbell, with fan chase covers by Will Conrad, & Paul Renaud, as well as the aforementioned Alex Ross subscription variant cover. Additionally, Dynamite is offering a number of incentive covers, including a 1-for-10 risqué variant by Alé Garza, a 1-for-25 Alex Ross virgin incentive cover, a 1-for-35 J Scott Campbell black and white incentive cover, and a 1-for-50 Alex Ross sketch incentive cover.
